Cutler's works through his childhood years into young adulthood include a collection of hand drawn periodicals, short stories and poetry. More mature works include his autobiography No Time for Rest and other, self-published works

Much of the work from Cutler's childhood years revolves around life in the Cutler household. The contents of the "articles" frequently concern the activities of family members. The covers are frequently decorated. Almost every installment of the "periodical" is mixed-media including glued clippings from published works, sketches, painted images, and in at least one case wax impressions.

During his school years, Cutler served as literary editor and contributor to The Vexillum, a monthly periodical published from November to June by students of Boston, Massachusetts' Volkmann School. Cutler contributed short stories that are annotated "R.C." at their beginnings and underscored at their conclusions. The works are sometimes humorous in nature.

Through the 1960s, Cutler self-published works that were distributed to friends and family. Whereof We Are Made (1965) is a collection of excised portions of the early chapters (through 1916) of Cutler's published autobiography No Time for Rest (1966). Unlike No Time, it was self-published with no eye for profit and distributed to friends and family only. He says in the introduction that it should therefore be considered a supplement to No Time. The Bedside Companion (1969) is a collection of favorite poems and sonnets. In the forward, Cutler discusses the role and value of poetry and specific poems in his life.

This series is arranged in chronological order. Correspondence and related, supporting materials are arranged by work and thereunder in rough alphabetical or chronological order. In some cases correspondence authors include stories of their personal experiences concerning Cutler family history as well as their own reminiscences. In the case of No Time for Rest, supporting materials include correspondence from Cutler's professional White House associates as well as materials created during the Eisenhower presidency.
